Welcome

A warm welcome to The Education Show 2015

With the amount of developments that schools have undergone since our last event, I'm so excited that it's that time of year again, when we all get together to share experience and ideas.

We understand that you, as an education professional, face new challenges every day and this show has been produced to support your school improvement plans and professional development.

We're delighted that the likes of Pie Corbett, Francesca Simon, Colin Watson, Jenny Smith and Professor Guy Claxton will be taking to the stage. We would also like to thank Scholastic, who are running the reading hub on stand G39-F40 and GL Assessment, who are running school leaders workshops on stand J100.

And of course, I'd like to draw your attention to the buzz of the show floor, where over 390 exhibitors are ready and waiting to demonstrate their latest, most innovative products, services and resources. I'm proud to welcome back those who have joined us before and introduce those making their show debut.

So without further ado, I wish you an enjoyable experience here at The Education Show and hope you leave full of ideas and inspiration.

Welcome

On behalf of the British Educational Suppliers Association, (BESA), your trade association, I welcome both delegates and exhibitors to The Education Show 2015.

In the years since The Education Show launched, schools have lived through many changes to education policies, school funding and the curriculum. With 2015 being an election year, these policy developments are likely to continue apace, with each party already outlining their priorities for education, should they be elected.

Pleasingly, BESA's research shows that the outlook for schools at the current time appears to be positive.

Budgets continue to rise significantly above the level of inflation in almost all areas of expenditure. Primary schools appear to be facing an increase of 4.1 per cent while secondary school budgets are set to rise by 2.2 per cent. What is even more positive is that all schools are predicting a further increase of 2.3 per cent for 2015/16.

However, whilst this is good news, it is important to remain mindful of the budgetary pressures facing schools as they look to invest in new primary and secondary assessment systems and resources to support the delivery of the new curriculum, and GCSE examinations. This has to be done whilst also seeking to maintain and improve their remaining school resources, furniture and infrastructure to cope with an increasing number of pupils over the coming years.

It has, therefore, never been more important for schools to invest wisely. Taking time to review all available options, asking all the questions you have relating to your school's specific requirements: the product's life expectancy, support costs, integration with current systems, the finer details of the warranty and having the opportunity to agree a good price are all an important part of wise procurement. And of course these questions are best done face to face with the suppliers at events such as The Education Show.

So in this time of flux, I encourage you to meet the suppliers at The Education Show and consider if they are one of our 300 member companies who annually sign up to an agreed code of best practice. Whether a BESA member or via another school's referral, it is important that you trust the supplier and the quality of their products.

And of course, all these changes drive a need for continuing professional development. Spending a day at The Education Show, attending a selection of the free seminar sessions, will always prove to be a lucrative investment of your time.

Please keep up to date with us at www.education-show.com.

Director, BESA

School Leaders' Summit

The Education Show caters for all education professionals, but it's important that those in leadership roles have an environment where they can take advantage of dedicated, high end content (not to mention find each other easily!) Throughout this two day conference, a combination of case studies, panel debates and networking opportunities, is tackling the obstacles facing today's school leaders, advising you on how best to invest your budgets and implement new ideas in your school.

'How do I...?' Theatre

'How do I... transform the teaching and learning experience in my school?' By taking a seat in the How do I...? theatre and getting involved in the practical side. A mixture of seminars, workshops and demonstrations presents innovative teaching techniques and learning strategies to help you keep up with (feel free to exceed as well) rapidly changing expectations.

Literacy, Numeracy & Assessment Theatre

Introducing our 2015 central feature. Changes to assessment mean changes to pupils' needs and expectations. As literacy and numeracy are key across all subjects, these sessions are focussing on how to improve skills in these areas through innovative teaching methods.

Early Years & SEN Theatre

If you are one of those lucky people who have the chance to make a difference within early years, or to those in our schools who need it most, these sessions are covering the practical side of how to overcome the challenges, embrace the opportunities and keep up with requirements. With the largest reforms to SEND provision in 30 years now upon us, we're here to help you take the next steps.

Parental Engagement 2.0

James Whitaker, Maths Teacher, Teach First Ambassador and ParentHub Founder.

"SCHOOLS THAT SUCCESSFULLY ENGAGE PARENTS IN LEARNING DEVELOP A TWO-WAY RELATIONSHIP BASED ON MUTUAL TRUST, RESPECT AND A COMMITMENT TO IMPROVING LEARNING OUTCOMES"

Do Parents Know They Matter? A. Harris and J. Goodall (2007)

This sounds simple. However, for a classroom teacher, building these meaningful relationships with parents can be anything but simple.

During my time in the classroom I was limited by the options to engage parents that were available to me. My school operated a text messaging service to notify parents of upcoming events, but if I wanted to send anything I had to submit a request. Once or twice a year we'd organise parents evenings, but I always felt the impact of these was limited by their infrequency.

The key issue is what happens to inform and engage parents in between these intermittent conversations.

The only option was to pick up the phone - worthwhile but often inefficient. I would usually catch parents at work, in the supermarket or making dinner - generally not in a position to discuss their child's progress in my lesson.

Wouldn't it be great, I thought, to regularly engage with individual parents in a manner that is efficient for me and convenient for them?

My solution is the ParentHub app - a comprehensive reference point for parents for all things relating to their child's education and the life of the school.

It enables individual teachers to engage parents in regular, two-way communication about their child's learning and progress. This is supported by a range of features that improve communication efficiency, including ePost for sending letters and reducing printing costs, and Student Insight that provides parents with up-to-date information about their child's attendance, attainment and timetable.

"THE POWER OF TECHNOLOGY TO EFFECTIVELY ENGAGE PARENTS IN THEIR CHILD'S EDUCATION HAS NOT BEEN FULLY REALISED BUT THIS CLEARLY HAS GREAT POTENTIAL"

Brett Wigdortz
 Founder and CEO, Teach First

The app approach is different. It allows parents to receive information in real time but digest and respond at a time convenient for them. It's account-based which means it isn't reliant on up-to-date contact details and, because it lives on a phone, it removes the need for parents to be proactive in logging into one of a range of web-based portals.

All interactions are logged in ParentHub, providing teachers with insight on who has read and replied to their messages. For perhaps the first time ever schools can really quantify levels of parental engagement on a regular basis.

With closer OFSTED scrutiny on parental engagement, it's time our schools moved away from sending generic broadcasts and gave teachers the ability to engage in regular communication with the parents of their students. I hope you agree.

Invicta Primary School's New Medium for Homework

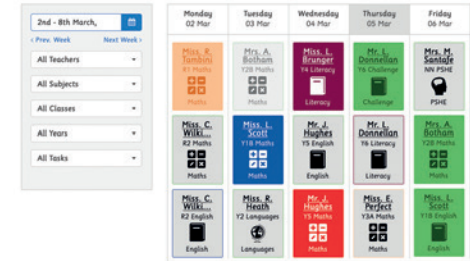

and why their pupils now ask for extra.

Jodie Cawte
Assistant Headteacher
Invicta Primary School

School Bio

Invicta is a great place to learn. Our children belong to a friendly, caring and supportive community. We welcome children from a range of social and ethnic backgrounds and we celebrate our diversity.

We aim to inspire them to develop academically through a focus on creativity, physical activity and emotional wellbeing. Every member of our school community has the right to reach their full potential and our mission is to do just that!

Q1 How were leadership at Invicta previously managing the homework process?

We had a homework policy in place, with a section for each of the key stages. Teachers would then send out paper-based homework for each child in their book bags on a weekly basis, which was then returned to class teachers on completion. With this method, our pain points were:

School: Monitoring consistency in amount, quality and type of homework set.

Teachers: Ensuring paper-based homework arrived at home without being lost or 'mislaidd' by pupils.

Parents: Knowing when homework was set, accessing the homework sheets their children were in charge of transporting home, knowing how long homework should take and how to support their children with it.

Q2 Why did your leadership team start looking for new initiatives for homework?

We wanted the school to use a paperless communication system which included homework, to engage and enthuse pupils through a medium they like to access. We also wanted a system that was easy to add on links, information and resources to the homework in the form of online sites and games.

Finally we wanted to enable parents to find a central system where they can help their children manage and access their homework, and to know where homework is set, and expectations around time spent and methodologies.

Q3 Since introducing Show My Homework (SMHW) to the school, what has the impact been for teachers and those managing the homework process?

Teachers have been able to link homework tasks to both the school policy and online resources that can extend the children further than the usual format of paper-based homework.

And for pupils?

More children are completing their homework, enjoying their homework and sharing what they have done with their peers and the teachers in school. Some are now asking for extra homework!

It has also improved their motivation for completing homework; pupils have reported that it is more enjoyable to access it online. They always know where to find the homework, what the deadline for completion is and how long they should spend on it.

Q4 Have you received any feedback from parents about SMHW?

The majority of parent feedback has been positive, as they like to know what their children's homework is, particularly for those who used to lose the paper version! Parents also like the function that tells them how long it should take, so they are not spending hours battling with their child to complete homework unnecessarily.

Q5 Would you recommend SMHW to another Primary School?

Yes. It makes homework easy to organise for teachers, and leaders can quickly monitor the quality of homework set. Children enjoy accessing it via the computer, and parents have a handle on what their child is expected to do. An all-around positive!

The Education Show's SEN information point is hosted once again by nasen, the leading professional association supporting special educational needs, providing visitors with valuable insight into policy changes and the statutory requirements of the new SEND Code of Practice. nasen also helped to curate The Education Show's three-day SEN CPD programme; free to attend, peer-led seminars and workshops developed to enable best practices and outstanding methodology for pupils with SEN to be shared and discussed.

In order to help make access to high-quality SEND resources as easy and straightforward as possible, nasen recently re-launched its SEND Gateway, a free online portal for resources and training materials from leading voluntary community sector organisations supporting children and young people with SEN. From April 2015, the SEND Gateway will also feature resources from private sector organisations to add to the wealth of high quality training events, practical resources and information available.

Bringing SEN resource providers together on one platform helps ensure that vulnerable children are given the best possible support at a time of major reforms in the education sector and, in particular, in line with the changes to SEN policy introduced on 1 September 2014. Visitors can find out more about the Gateway, free resources, nasen's professional development programme and the benefits of joining the nasen community by visiting stand M13.
