National Glass Centre at the University of Sunderland is a centre of national excellence supporting the research, teaching, production, exhibition and enjoyment of contemporary glass. The Centre celebrates Sunderland's unique glass making heritage and explores the creative potential of this extraordinary material through a programme of world class exhibitions, presenting the work of leading contemporary artists in glass and ceramics.

As a result of a successful fundraising campaign, National Glass Centre is currently undergoing a £2.25 million re-development and will reopen to the public on 29 June 2013.
